

Andy Seiler

Professional Rodeo Announcer Andy Seiler has never really met a stranger, so it looks as if the career path may have been the right one. He started in high school calling the action at junior and high school rodeos when he was not competing in his favorite event, team roping. The Ocala, Florida native knew that it was something from the start he could not just do as a hobby.

As a student at Troy University, Andy paid the bills traveling to smaller rodeos in the Southeast competing in college rodeo and announcing those smaller rodeos until 2007. After winning the Walt Garrison Award of College Rodeo and being introduced to Bob Barnes, his life as an announcer changed forever.

Andy is now announcing all over the country in the PRCA and is earning his oats as an up and coming voice for professional rodeo. His firsthand knowledge and experience will keep you tuning into the action to see what will happen next. Keep your eyes on the action and make sure you pay attention, because you never know what you might find out or get to enjoy while watching and listening at the rodeo.
